Learning Objectives

- ▶ Propose two (2) connections between health equity and overdose prevention.
- ▶ Describe three (3) ways the NOPN Health Equity Tool can help support your local work in the future.
- ▶ Apply the NOPN Health Equity Tool to analyze at least one (1) real-world case study or scenario related to overdose prevention.

How does health equity relate to overdose prevention?

How do we reframe our overdose prevention strategies to work with communities rather than for communities?

NOPN Health Equity Tool

Impact statement

What is the impact statement for your coalition or local overdose prevention work? What are you working to achieve?

Socio-economic, political, and cultural context

Which populations experience the greatest historical and/or current burden? List 3 or more data points (statistics, graphs/charts, maps) demonstrating the context surrounding health disparities in your community.

Rationale

Provide 2-3 bullet points describing the rationale for your coalition to take a health equity lens. Why is it important?

Key Activities

On the next page, complete the sections for each of the following areas of your work:

- Overdose prevention strategies: How you implement your overdose prevention strategies and which strategies you choose
- Coalition building: How you build and grow your coalition
- Sustainability: How you think about sustaining the work of your coalition
- Communication: How you approach communications, both internally within your coalition and with community collaborators
- Data: How you measure your work, including which data you choose and how you collect it

Community collaborators List 3 or more new collaborators that your coalition should engage to better address health equity in your work. They could be connected to any of the elements of the NOPN model. Priority activities
For each NOPN model element, list at least one way that your coalition can prioritize health equity and inclusion. What is most important for your coalition to focus on?
Short-term outcomes and indicators
List at least 3 short-term (3 months) indicators to measure how your coalition can better address health equity in the priority activities above.
Long-term outcomes and indicators List 3 longer-term (2-3 years) indicators to measure how your coalition can help improve health equity going forward.

Case Examples in California

CASE STUDY

SafeRx Santa Cruz

Santa Cruz is a community all about connection. COVID-19 has caused extreme isolation, leading to more overdose deaths. The team collected demographic data to understand which community members have been the hardest hit by COVID-19 and overdoses. They increased their attention to trauma, stigma, and bias which led them to engage with the criminal justice system. One of their biggest accomplishments during the COPN Accelerator 2.0 Program was facilitating a partnership between their local Harm Reduction Coalition and their county MAT group. Due to this new partnership, low-barrier MAT treatment is now being offered along with syringe services.

Thinking about our key learnings specific to involvement with the Accelerator program, it reinforced, again, the need for equity in all things and being able to identify who is still missing.

-Jenna Shankman, Program Manager

OVERDOSE S PREVENTION TO NETWORK

Drug Safe Solano

Throughout the COPN Accelerator 2.0 Program, Solano kept coming back to one thing: equity. They chose to focus on being more inclusive by engaging with the community through providing services and gaining partners, building trust and stronger relationships, and adopting Trauma-Informed Care practices and policies. They included new partners in their coalition such as people impacted by substance use disorder as well as Project Roomkey, an organization that works with the homeless population, to further their commitment to equity.

Health equity is not just health equity, it's also social justice, it's also social equity, so we try to adopt a more holistic approach to that.
